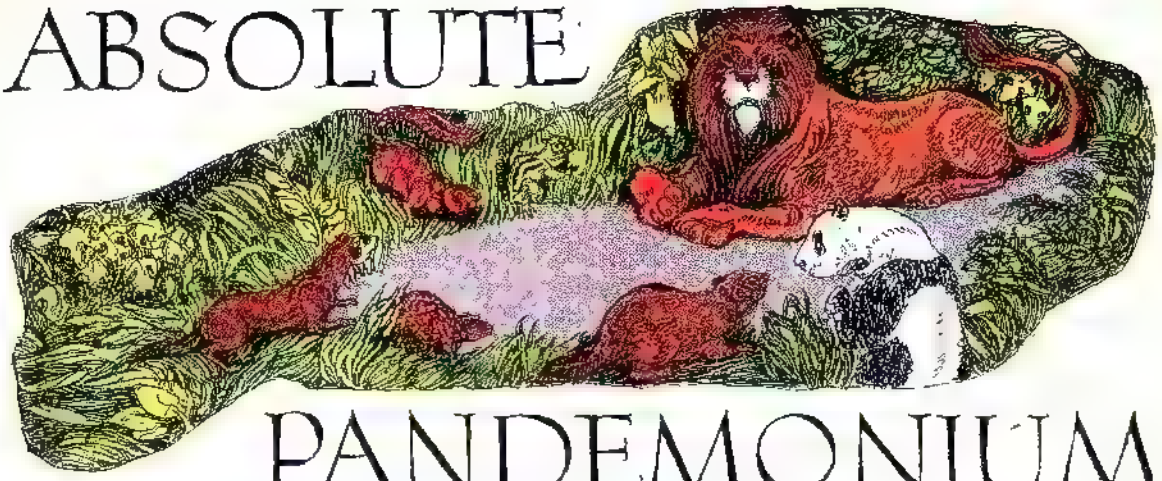
ABSOLUTE PANDEMONIUM



THE advertisement in the Zooville Daily News had read: BIG SALE! TREES! ALL KINDS! HURRY!

So they hurried . . . from all over Zooville, the animals ran to The Tree Market. As he ran, Sid Squirrel was muttering, "I'll get the best buy of all." As he ran, Wally Weasel was muttering, "I'll get the best buy of all." As he ran, Gary Groundhog was muttering, "I'll get the best buy of all." As he ran, Benny Beaver was muttering the same thing; and so was Peter Panda, and Chucky Chipmunk!

Six animals . . . each one determined to get the best buy of all! When Larry Lion, who owned The Tree Market, saw them all descending upon him with those determined looks on their faces, he knew what they were thinking. He knew right away that each of them expected to get the best buy of all! Larry Lion scratched his head. This was going to be difficult. Everyone in Zooville knew how serious was the competition between these particular six animals. Why, Larry Lion remembered the time that these six had started the big fuss at the Annual Easter Party . . . just because each of them had insisted that he had found the most colored eggs. Or the time, Larry now recalled, that the weasel, the chipmunk, and the panda had fought against the beaver, the groundhog, and the squirrel for the coconut-bowling contest the year before. The losers had gotten so angry that they started throwing coconuts around—a very dangerous game, indeed! It had been, Larry muttered (as he used his two biggest words), "Ab-so-lute pan-de-mo-ni-um!"

And now, again, it was ab-so-lute pan-de-mo-ni-um! Poor Larry Lion stood in the middle of his Tree Market while the six anxious animals milled around him.

"What's the best buy?" yelled Benny Beaver. "Whatever it is, I want it."

"No, no, give it to me!" Gary Groundhog shouted.

Some shoving began. Sid Squirrel banged against Gary, and Peter Panda banged against Benny. A fistfight broke out between Chucky Chipmunk and Wally Weasel.

"Oh, oh, oh," howled Larry Lion, even louder than the rest, "it's ut-ter ab-so-lute pan-de-mo-ni-um!"

"What?" All the animals stopped arguing. In the sudden silence, Sid asked, "What did you say, Larry?"—for if Larry Lion was famous for his fine trees, he was even more famous for his great, big words.

"Never mind what I said," Larry said quickly, taking advantage of the sudden silence to tell them a few facts. "The important thing now is for you dumb animals to get something through your dumb heads."

"We're not dumb!" they all shouted together.

"Well!" smiled Larry. "That's the first time I've ever heard all of you agree about something at the same time!" The six animals smiled a bit, too. Then Larry continued, "But you do act dumb, the way you're always fighting to get the best of each other. Now listen, I have no 'best' buy today. All my trees are good buys. Now I'm going to sell each of you a different kind of tree, half-grown. They're all different kinds, but they're all equally fine buys."

The animals nodded and gave Larry their money. Each one used a wheelbarrow to lug his tree home. And then, for a peaceful two years, Zooville's noisiest rivals kept quiet. They were too busy watching their trees grow to bother with any other kind of competition. But when the two years were up, the trees were full-grown. And then, in spite of Larry Lion's lecture, the arguments began again. . . .

"My tree is a white birch," said Sid Squirrel. "It's the best of all. I can climb it and it bends and swings me down to the ground. It's a regular playground!"

"My tree's the best," insisted Wally Weasel. "It's an evergreen called a fir. It's the only one that stays green all year round, and besides, at Christmas I can put pretty lights on it."

"That's not as good as my tree," Gary Groundhog snorted. "My tree is a tall elm, and I can build a tree-house way up high in its branches. No one else can do that with his tree."

"Pooh!" Benny Beaver said. "Your trees are all quite ordinary compared to my dogwood tree. Mine has the most beautiful blossoms of any tree around—all pink and white and ever so fragrant."

Peter Panda argued, "Mine's the best of all. It's a weeping willow. The leaves droop down to the ground and make a swell secret hide-out inside them for me to play in."

"Nope, you're all wrong. It's my apple tree that wins," said Chucky Chipmunk. "Boy, do I have fun every autumn, picking apples to eat, and to make delicious applesauce out of. Yummy!"

But a strange thing happened. Although each of them insisted that his tree was the best, no real fight broke out. They discussed, they argued, but they kept calm. Then one of them said, "I guess we've learned something in these two years. Peace can be rather pleasant."

The other five laughed. "Yeah, no more . . . what was that word?"

Larry Lion came by just then and helped them out. "Pandemonium," he smiled. "I'm glad to see you fellows got smart at last!"
